Words are not adequate to describe the contributions made by telecommunications towards the economic, technological and social advancement of human communities living in various parts of the world. In the course of the past one hundred years, this means of communication has been undergoing tremendous technological sophistications. It may be certainly difficult to provide a systematic perspective of the services rendered by this by way of bringing people closer, promoting peace and stimulating economic development. However, in any field of human endeavour, the vital role played by telecommunications is not a point of contention.

This means of communication which has not only crowned itself with unsurpassed development but has also proved its mettle in the service of humankind is a scientific phenomenon that manifested itself only a century ago. History provides ample evidence that Ethiopia is one of the first countries sharing pride of place by way of benefiting from this new technology thorough the utilization of its services. It may be today tantamount to a legend to recount the problems encountered in introducing into the country the technology of communication which was novel to our people in the face of persistent opposition from certain conservative elements in society. It is not difficult to conceive, however, that heavy sacrifices have been incurred in the process of building an efficient network of communication facilities. It is worthwhile to remember that at a time when modern means of transport were conspicuously absent, telephone lines were being extended through the sheer human labour and the services provided by beasts of burden. Beginning from this humble origin telephone services have been undergoing tremendous trials and tribulations to attain their present stage of development. Viewed in this light, one is forced by circumstances to consider the progress achieved in the field of communications during the past one hundred years.

It is difficult to imagine how difficult it was to communicate by telephone over vast distances through a relay system of operation. At the same time also we are living today in a more enlightened era when through the intermediary or satellite technology we are communicating from one continent to another in a matter of seconds. This provides a living testimony of the fact that a vast gulf is standing between the past and the present of communication by telephone. It is small wonder that Ethiopia has been giving special attention to this sector of the national economy. In accordance with this priority attention efforts were being made for our services even if these were not as adequate as desired to march in step with the imperatives of technological development. However, even if these efforts were limited in scope, they have not fallen far short of those made by countries whose economies were undergoing a similar metamorphosis.

When we survey the international situation in the arena of telephone services, the stage of development we have attained is not a matter for self-congratulations. Let us, for instance, consider the report issued by the International Telecommunication Union (ITU) on telephone services in December. According to this report, 71 percent of the 575 million telephones in use in the world are at the service of a few economically advanced countries. Developing countries like ours are finding themselves in a situation which leaves much to be desired regarding telephone use. Viewed in another light, there are only 25 telephones for 10,000 people in our country. This shows vividly that we have still to go a long way before fully meeting the needs of our people in this vital field of communication.

At present, ETA is providing telephone services to 140,000 subscribers. It is highly remunerating to note that no less than the same number of people are demanding new telephone lines. The Plan of action of the industrialization strategy being currently pursued by the Government pays special attention to the development of communication in urban areas so far denied this services. It is, therefore, our firm belief that the provision of telephone services in our country would be balanced in future. The Government is undoubtedly doing its level best to meet the growing demand for telecommunication facilities on the part of the society in accordance with the economic capabilities of the country. There is every reason to believe that the seven-year development plan drawn up by ETA recently would be crowned with success following its practical implementation for the benefit of the people.

Telecommunication services play a decisive role in the social and economic reconstruction of our country. In this respect one cannot underestimate the efforts already made to extend these services to all urban centers of the country. Naturally a great deal still remains to be done. Even if much still remains to be done in the future in the field of developing the communication network, the contributions made by professional citizens towards this end and the support provided by the Government occupy an important niche in the hall of fame.

I seize the opportunity provided by the centenary celebrations of the services provided by the Authority during that long span of time to say "congratulations" to those engineers, technicians, officials and other workers in general who are rendering a meritorious service to the nation. At the same time also I would like to express my hope and desire that the new chapter of work opening itself before them would usher in a new era of peace, progress and prosperity.

The scientific conduct of research and the outcome this patient pursuit in the field of communications occupy a prominent place in the historical progress of humanity which had succeeded in registering great achievements. It was natural from the very beginning for effective means of communication to be devised for conveying messages from place to place. Historians provide us with ample evidence that primitive man was utilizing various signs as a means of communication.

From these primitive stages communication methods have stage by stage, through painstaking efforts, attained their present state of technological sophistication. The basis of development in the field of communication is message by word of mouth. Generally, this assumed the form of written communication. This eventually culminated in the realization of the technology of telecommunications.

It is not necessary to quote chapter and verse to show that share contributed by the telephone today to the betterment of human life is of tremendous significance. Nowadays, the need for telephones cannot be viewed in isolation from the demand for other basic necessities of life. For this reason, far from being a luxury item, the telephone has become a service inextricably linked with our social life. Far from facilitating the tasks that we are fulfilling day by day, the existence of this modern means of communication has enabled relations of good understanding between nations, in stimulating international cooperation, world peace and in accelerating the pace of progress being made by man.

It is more than self-evident that the Government is paying utmost attention that Ethiopia should keep up with the pace of technological development achieved by the rest of the world in the field of communication. In accordance with the higher responsibility shouldered by the Ethiopian Telecommunications Authority for realizing this objective, Ethiopia has succeeded in becoming a beneficiary of modern means of the communications. In this respect from the era of long-distance telephone lines to microwave communication, satellite and modern digital exchanges, the five-year programmes implemented by the ETA for achieving this radical transformation of society occupy a prominent place in the history of the organization.

At this Juncture, it would be appropriate to review the difficult path trekked by the Authority when we are considering the stage of development attained by the organization. Let us, for example, contemplate for a moment the problems encountered In time past when extending an inter-urban telephone line from one town to another. When one considers the fact that modern roads and advanced means of transport were not available, at the time one can understand the problems encountered during those difficult days by our technicians. There were mountains and hills to be scaled & deserts & forests to be traversed in the process of successfully extending telephone lines. Veteran technicians provide ample evidence that this momentous task was achieved through crude human labour and the deployment of beasts of burden. Thanks to modern science and technology, most of the problems previously encountered have ceased to be obstacles to development. We are to day becoming the beneficiaries of better services by replacing telephone wires by wireles / radio means.

In a developing country like ours, one cannot underestimate the history of one hundred years of telecommunication services. Perhaps our country would be occupying a prominent role if a search was being made among developing nations that have a record of such long years of service. We should be proud of our achievement in this field. At the same time, however, is the stark truth facing us in terms of the extent of communication network we had developed during that long period of time. This is an inevitable question. It is worth mentioning however, that all developmental achievement in the sector that was achieved during the first sixty years was totally wrecked during the war of resistance against fascist invasion and the war of aggression.

The Ethiopian Telecommunications Authority was created by charter in 1953. By undertaking development projects in a planned way and by expanding its services throughout the country through its own resources and the loans made available to it by international financial institutions, the Authority has, over the past forty years succeeded in achieving an enormous telecommunication backbone network in Ethiopia. So far, six development programmes that had demanded considerable financial investment for their realization had successfully been accomplished. At present the seventh five-year development plan is being implemented.

Even if sufficient time and space is not at our disposal to outline in detail the projects implemented in accordance with these development projects, one can highlight some of the prominent achievements. Because communication facilities play a decisive role in expediting the social and economic progress of our country. Towards this objective so far 37 major towns in Ethiopia have been provided with automatic telephone service. All in all, 500 towns and villages have today telephone services. Ethiopia's communication link via Sululta station had enabled the country to enjoy modern communication services with the outside world during the past 15 years.

Ethiopia has been making relentless effort to march in step with the modern changes in technology in the field of telecommunications. In accordance with these development perspectives digital telephone exchanges have become operational in Addis Ababa & several other urban centers since 1989. This has not only made it possible for efficient services to be provided but has also provided our customers, for the first time, direct calling capability to the outside world. Through these modern digital exchanges, the provision of complimentary services has also enabled our customers to be the beneficiaries of fax and data communication means.

In accordance with the sustained effort of expansion of telecommunication, some 140,000 subscribers are now utilizing our services. This figure does not include those who are utilizing the services of public telephones. As far as telex is concerned ETA has 982 subscribers. Before too long it is believed that the number of subscribers for the fax service, with a very growing demand, would reach 950. When viewed in the light of the demand for telecommunication services, this might certainly seem to be a modest achievement. However, seen against the background of the country's general economic level one cannot underestimate the achievements registered.

ETA succeeded in achieving these tasks of construction by acquiring the necessary facilities and equipment through a development process involving foreign currency acquired through loans and credits. Here, one cannot pass without mentioning that in the enormous task of expansion our only domestic resource is available in the form of our trained manpower. For this reason credit is due to the selfless services provided for years by members of the Authority for the steady development of our telecommunication facilities. It is inevitable for this to be inscribed in indelible ink in the annals of the organization.

Finally, we are now celebrating the centenary of the advent of modern means of communication in our country. On the one hand, this is a happy reminder of the course undertaken by the history of one hundred years of communication services in our country. On the other, the occasion also provides us with the opportunity to assess the immense tasks of construction still remaining before of us. qualitatively or quantitatively, the effort being made for the expansion of communication services have to achieve their set goal. It is ETA's hope and desire that the unflinching support of the Government and the people will remain with it for the achievement of this noble goal.

Communication is one of the most fundamental elements conducive to the economic Social and political development of a country. It is to be recalled that the history of telephone services goes back 100 years in Ethiopia. During the past ten decades, telephone services have certainly made a miraculous transformation from appliances of a luxury character to those which prescribe to the basic needs of members of society.

No country can dispense today with telecommunication services. That is precisely why the expansion of telecommunication facilities is being given an important place in the development and growth of a nation's economy. It is an indubitable fact that at any time and places telecommunication services constitute the driving force behind the development of health, transport, industry, agriculture, education and trade in any country. Consequently, it is unthinkable for any process of economic development to proceed smoothly in the glaring absence of those essential services.

Ethiopia had given special attention to the development of communications. In accordance with this priority attention, the Ethiopian Telecommunications Authority (ETA) has been drawing up five-year plans aimed at developing the concerned sector for the benefit of the rural and urban population of the country without sparing its efforts. Still it is to be admitted that it is difficult if not impossible to meet all the needs of a nation in an economy like that of Ethiopia which is finding itself at a low level of development. At the same time, however it is an undeniable fact that through financial loans made available to it by international organizations and through its own resources ETA has been making a worthy contribution towards the expansion of telecommunication services.

Ethiopia's major towns have been provided with automatic telephone services. It is small wonder therefore that years have elapsed since direct telephone links were achieved nationally and internationally. Inter-urban telephone lines over a long distance were largely replaced by micro-wave links. At the same time also peripheral towns were provided with radio-telephone Communication through satellites, one of the wonders of modern technology, was introduced into our country some 15 years ago. Through the Satellite Earth Station built at Sululta, 12 kilometers north of Addis Ababa, Ethiopia is now directly or indirectly linked by telephone to the rest of the world. This station is also making considerable contributions towards developing domestic communication and improving television services.

Beyond extending the horizon of its services in accordance with its development programmes recently realized, mention must be also made that the Authority has been making some tangible efforts directed towards introducing the country to modern means of technology. In this respect telephone exchanges have been digitalized in many cities and towns thereby enhancing efficiency in communication. What is more, because of the introduction of fax services, these modern facilities are helping administrative offices and the business community to conduct their work more efficiently.

It is certainly virtually impossible to do full justice to the trials and tribulations experienced by telephone services during the past one hundred years. Nevertheless, we have prepared this modest magazine on the occasion of this significant anniversary by way of doing the impossible. How did telephone services begin in Ethiopia? What services were provided to the public in the past? This modest magazine aims at providing answers to these and related questions. In conclusion efforts have been also made by way of providing in a summary form future plans of action in the field of telecommunication.

We are now celebrating the centenary of the advent of telecommunication services in Ethiopia which had registered various notable achievements during those long years. the event is not to be celebrated only by professionals in the field at the service of the Authority. There is no doubt at all that customers of the ETA who are the beneficiaries of these services would also share our joy and jubilation on this significant anniversary.

Its Birth

History tells us that telecommunication services made their debut in Ethiopia in 1894. As it may be recalled it was in the nineteenth century that Ethiopia was making some discernible efforts to resume contacts with the outside world. This was happening at an opportune time in the history of Ethiopia when Emperor Menelik, through the intermediary of his Swiss advisor Alfred Ilg, was introducing various innovations into the country. One of these innovations was the introduction of telecommunications technology into Ethiopia, which as a basis of development was then new to the world. Telecommunication was the product of the invention of the telephone by Graham Bell and Ethiopia was one of its beneficiaries one hundred years ago.

Engineer Alfred Ilg and his collaborator M. chefneux were granted a contract to link Addis Ababa with Harrar through rail, postal, telegraphic and telephonic connections. Work on the project had started in 1894. Work on the 477 kilometre telephone line which took three years to complete was finished in 1897. Towns on the telephone line were then Gara Mulata, Kulubi, Kuni, Lagar din, Fantale. Tchoba and Baltchi.

Another far reaching endeavour of the time was the building of a railway line between Addis Ababa and Djibouti. At the same time also it was planned that a telegraph line should run parallel with the Franco-Ethiopian railways. This telegraphic line was executed as planned.

An agreement was finally reached to setup an organization known as the Franco-Ethiopian Railway company which would be in charge of a telephone service for its own use. It was also stipulated that the telephone line should be put at the service of the company and the Ethiopian Government. Work on the railway line between Djibouti and Dire-Dawa commenced in 1898 and was accomplished in 1906. Work

June 1909 seven experts had come to Ethiopia. It was in 1909 that Ethiopia had requested for the first time to be a member of the International Telegraph Union. At a meeting held in 1932 in Spain, the organization called itself the International Telecommunications Union. From then on, Ethiopia was an active member of the Union.

The telephone and telegraph lines established in Ethiopia were found to be vital for administrative, foreign relations and the dissemination of news. That is why beginning in 1904 the communication facilities had come under Government administration. It was also decided that an Ethiopian Should administer the organization. Thus, Lij Bayene Yimer took over the administration of the organization from M. chefneux

To Monsier Michel

I have ordered chefneux to hand over all post and telegraph-telephone materials to Beyene. You also know that in Europe post, telephone and telegraph is in the hands (is the domain) of the state. But even if Beyene has taken over the administration, you will continue to serve me as adviser until I assign another qualified person who knows the job. I am asking you therefore, to continue to serve with diligence in consultation with Beyene...

Activities of the Ministry of posts, Telegraphs and Telephones.

When the Ministry of Posts, Telegraphs and Telephones was established, the relevant services in the field of communication were being rendered through the intermediary of a few lines. Undoubtedly the greatest beneficiary of these services was the Government itself. At the same time however, there were public service stations and telephone subscribers. Between 1915 and 1932, there were 200 telephone subscribers in Addis Ababa. There were telephone subscribers in other major urban centres. The first telephone subscriber in Addis Ababa was the Bank of Abyssinia.

Among the development outlined by the ministry of posts, Telegraphs and Telephones, the high-frequency radio station on which work had commenced in the vicinity of Kaliti in 1931 deserves special mention. The foundation of the building to house the station was laid and a foreign company was put in charge of its construction. While work on building construction was proceeding, a Swede, Frank Hamer, instituted a radio communication training centre. Selected students from Ethiopian schools were sent to this centre for training.

A radio connection was initiated in 1932 with Egypt. Through this new line of communication Ethiopia was initiating telegraphic contacts with the rest of the world. Direct radio links with Djibouti and Aden were also established. Work on the Kaliti radio station was accomplished in 1934/35, and Long-distance communication with London and Paris Commenced. As far as domestic services are concerned, radio communication facilities were installed in Debre-Markos and Harer towns.

Existing problems, Reconstruction and Expansion

Three years before the outbreak of the second world war fascist Italy invaded and occupied Ethiopia. It was then that the communications facilities set up by the Government were put out of service. The invading fascist forces had certainly made an effort to rehabilitate the existing communication facilities. However, they were targets of attack from Ethiopian patriotic forces and could not, therefore, be fully operational.

This not withstanding, during the years of fascist occupation the first automatic telephone exchanges were installed in Addis Ababa and Asmara.

Even when the Italian fascist forces were defeated in 1940/41, the Ethiopian Communication infrastructure did not quit succeed in escaping second destruction. The retreating Italian fascist troops were making assurances double sure that the communication facilities were being destroyed in the wake of their defeat. It was only through fortuitous circumstances, that the automatic telephone exchange had escaped deliberate acts of fascist vandalism.

When Ethiopia's age-old independence was restored in 1941, work was starting seriously on the re-establishment of the Ministry of Posts, Telegraphs and Telephones. Some of the tasks facing the Ministry were the following:-

- restoration of telegraphic communication with the outside world;
- rehabilitation of domestic telegraph and telephone lines;
- re-installation of radio communication equipment.

national and national communication services were provided. Through international radio communication, after 1948 Ethiopia had initiated links with Aden, Djibouti, Khartoum, Sana, Beirut and America.

Regarding domestic telephone services, a total of 1963 kilometres of communication lines were rehabilitated. This had made it possible for Dessie, Jimma, Nekemte, Dire Dawa and Debre Markos to be again linked to Addis Ababa by telephone and telegraph.

The Ministry of Posts, Telegraphs and Telephones was organized thus following the end of the second World war and had thereby succeeded in carrying out various work of restoration. There is no doubt at all that the various departments that were coordinating their efforts in the development of communication services had registered worthy achievements to their credit. However, due to shortage of trained manpower and financial resources it has not been possible for communication services to expand to the extent initially planned. That is why it was planned to create an organizational structure conducive to development by conducting studies through the expertise and co-operation provided by international financial institutions.

The Ethiopian Telecommunications Board (1953 - 1974)

Previously, telecommunications services were coming under the authority of the Ministry of Posts, Telegraphs and Telephones. Through the efforts exerted by this same Ministry it had been made possible to rehabilitate the service lines destroyed during the fascist occupation of Ethiopia. However even if these communication lines were to some extent rehabilitated, the task of building again what had been generally destroyed demands considerable efforts and financial resources. Because the second world war was still going on in the early 1940s, a glaring shortage of transport facilities and technical equipment was manifesting itself. At the same time also Ethiopia was being seriously be deviled with shortage of financial resources and adequately trained manpower. These problems had aggravated the already existing situation. It is to be recalled that Ethiopia was a member of the World Bank. Thus, in accordance with a request addressed to it, the World Bank dispatched a three-man mission to Ethiopia in 1950. The purpose of the mission was to assess the damage, done to Ethiopia's communication facilities as a result of the war. At the same time also it was to explore ways and means of providing loans to Ethiopia in the best economic field possible by conducting the necessary studies. In accordance with these preliminary studies, the team of experts discovered that one of the economic sectors needing assistance was the telecommunication service. This was also followed by studies conducted by other experts. According to these studies, it was stated in very unerring terms that the expansion of telecommunication services was tantamount to the general development of the country's economy. In other words, Ethiopia had eminently merited assistance. However the following preliminary conditions had to be fulfilled before the granting of the loans.

- The establishment of a legal institution wholly in charge of telecommunication services;
- except for military ones to transfer all civil telecommunication equipment and facilities to the relevant institution;
- to organize the institution in the best way possible and to name it properly;
- The Government should allocate a capital worth 3 million Birr to the institution that it is creating;
- to provide the institution with the loans extended in accordance with these studies;
- the Government should provide guarantees that public establishments should pay the proper remuneration for the services provided to them.

Before the signing of the loan agreement the Minister of posts, Telegraphs and Telephones and other officials had on behalf of the Ethiopian Government conducted negotiations with the team of experts from the World Bank on the preliminary conditions to be fulfilled. Following these negotiations, The telecommunication institution was established by charter as an autonomous body in December 1952 in accordance with proclamation No-131.

As far as the name of the institution was concerned, it was suggested that it should be known as "The Ethiopian Telecommunication Directorate" "The Ethiopia Telecommunication Authority" or the "The Ethiopian Telecommunication Board". Finally chosen was the "Ethiopian Telecommunication Board" which immediately went into operation under that name.

Organization of the Board and its primary Duties

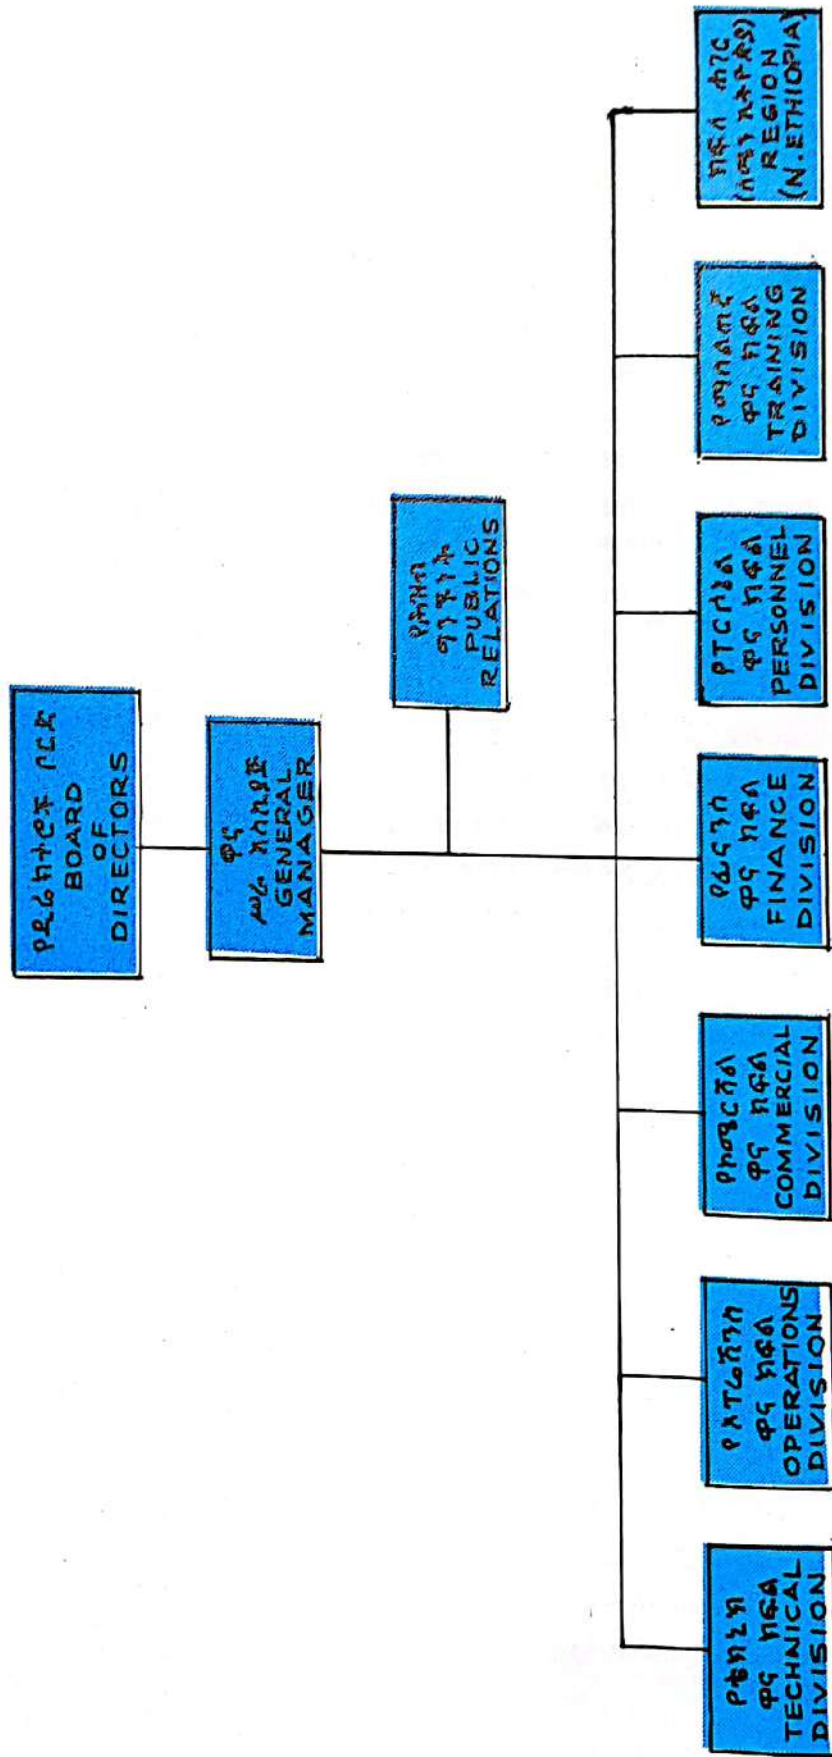

It is stipulated in the proclamation establishing it that a seven-member Board chaired by the Minister of Transport and communications would be appointed by the Government to decide on matters related to telecommunication services. Following the establishment of the Board, a General Manager was appointed. The Board's main duties are the following:-

1. to outline, and have it approved, the organizational structure of the Board;
2. to appropriate all telecommunication assets in the hands of the Ministry of Posts, Telegraphs and Telephones;
3. to see to it that the financial resources for implementing projects are at its disposal.

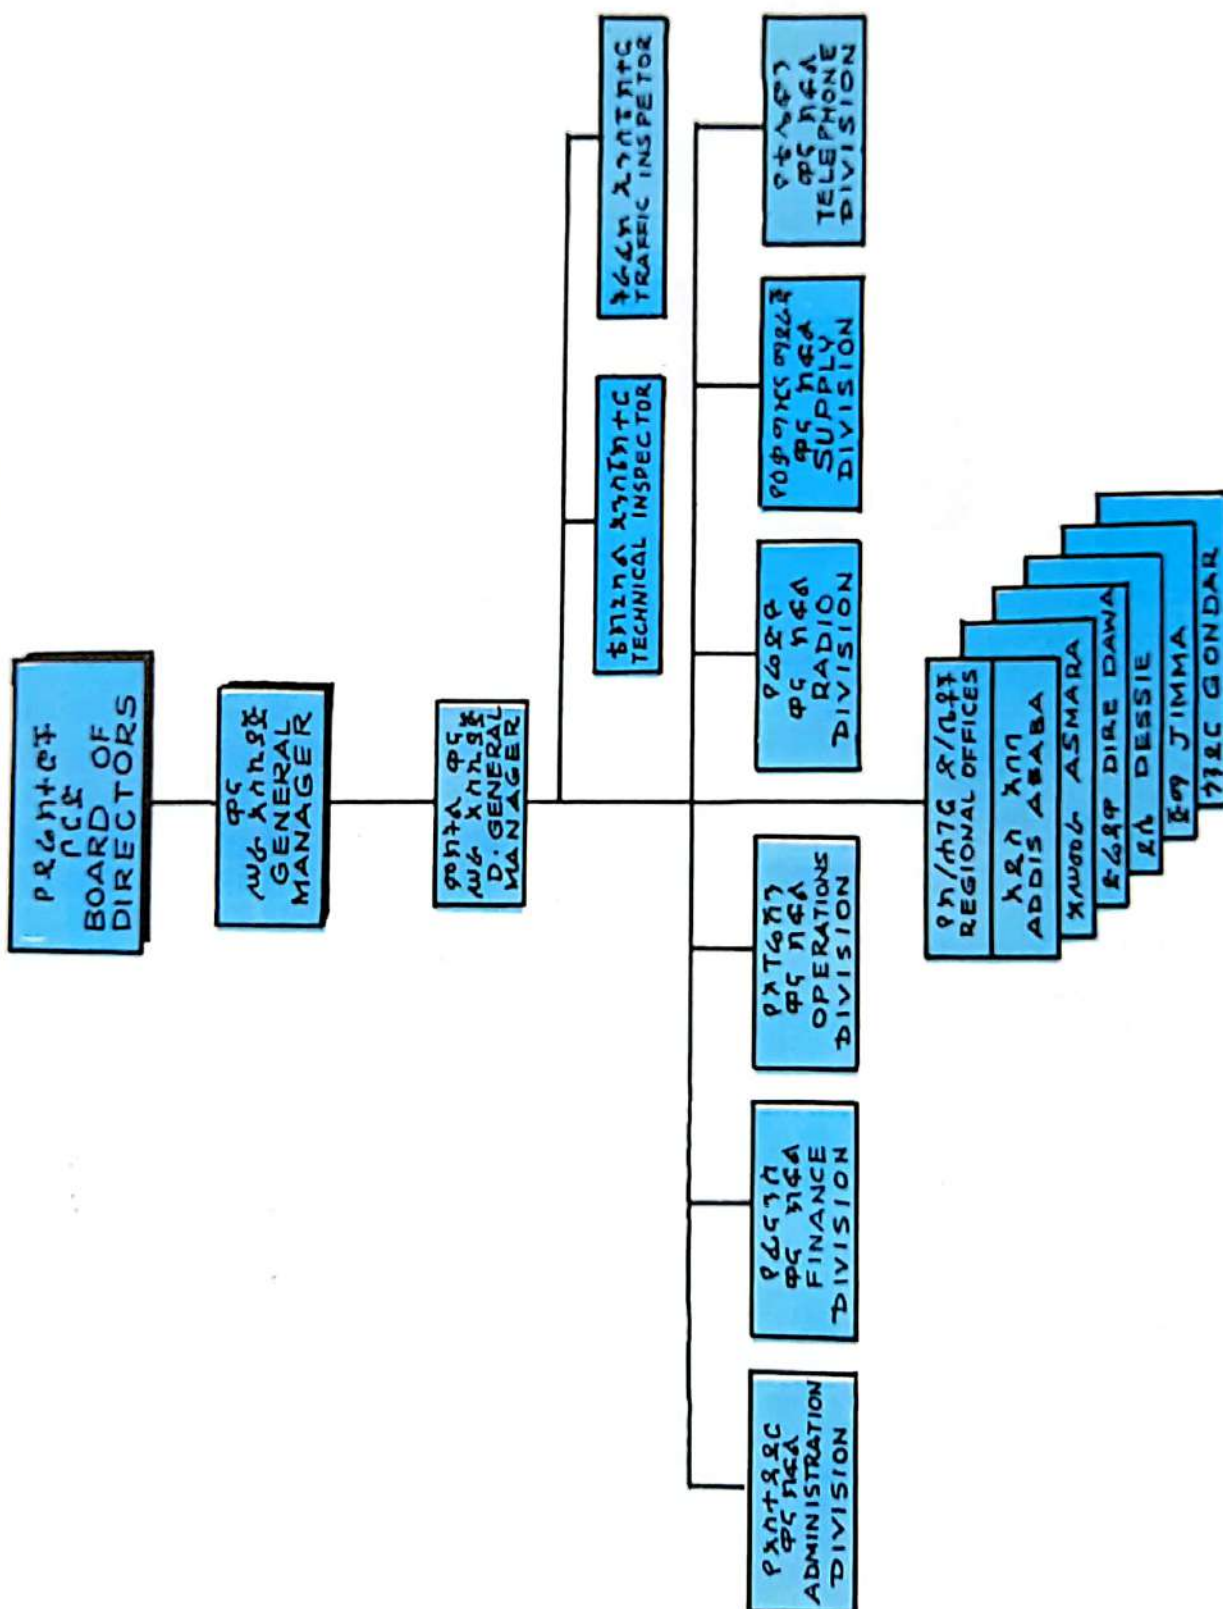

It was vital to translate these plans of action into reality. Towards this end, in accordance with the administrative structure approved, the Board was organized in six divisions at the main office in Addis Ababa. At the same time also a branch office was established in Asmara to follow up the operational activities of communication services in Northern Ethiopia.

After the administrative structure was in operation for some time, it was realized that the authority given to the various divisions was narrow in scope because responsibilities and decisions were concentrated in a few hands. For this reason, the administrative structure was superseded by another in 1962. The new administrative structure is a radical departure from the previous one. For one thing; the central office was to concentrate its efforts in drawing up the long and short term development plans. It is also to formulate policies and directives; services at the disposal of customers and repair work were to be conducted on the regional level. Thus, The Addis Ababa Region and provincial offices were made to operate apart from the main administrative office. Thus the tasks and responsibilities of the six administrative divisions were clearly differentiated. It is clear that qualitatively and quantitatively, work behind providing telecommunication service has been growing more and more complex with the passage of time. At the same time also responsibilities had been progressively developing to the rank and file of a steadily growing number of officials and technicians. This has made it imperative to build a more efficient administrative structure for the organization. It is small wonder, therefore, that this had been undergoing tremendous radical change in conformity with the dictates of the times. Two Deputy General Managers were assigned to the technical administration office in 1963. At the same time also a Branch office was opened in Shashamane the same year for looking into and controlling development activities in the southern Region. Later in 1965, two places in the administrative structure headed by Deputy General Managers were abolished. They were replaced by two departments looking in to work related to administrative and technical fields. Again in 1971 a new administrative structure came into force. In accordance with this new directive, the Head office was organized in three departments and nine divisions. Attached here with are charts of the administrative structures adapted at various times. To march in step with these administrative structures, considerable efforts have been made by way of bringing into existence adequately trained manpower.

Development projects implemented during the Lifetime of the Board

It is beyond doubt that telecommunication services are vital for stimulating economic development and for bringing about a steady improvement in the living standard of a people. For this reason the Government is always aiming at expanding communication services by outlining its development plans of action. To be in a strong position to realize these aims it is always outlining and implementing consecutive development programmes. Between 1953, when the Board was established and 1974, four development programmes had been implemented. The first three development programmes were being carried out every three years. From the fourth on ward, a five year development plan was in force. This change has been creating a favourable situation by way of successfully co-ordinating the Board's construction activities with the overall national development plans the aims of the development programmes consecutively implemented and the major tasks fulfilled are summarised hereunder.

The First Development Programme: 1953-1961

The attention paid by this programme was to the rehabilitation of the communication infrastructure destroyed during the fascist invasion and occupation. Going side by side with this was the full accomplishment of expansion of the Addis Ababa telephone exchange, the setting up a manual one with various lines for 12 towns and expanding six others. Included in the programme were the following projects:- putting telegraph equipment and means of radio communication at the service of domestic and international Links; and building offices and residential quarters for technicians. The programme was accomplished through the 3.7 million Birr obtained from the World Bank and the 3.0 million Birr acquired from domestic sources.

Second Development
Programme: 1962 - 1964

This programme included the expansion of automatic exchanges in Addis Ababa, Debre Zeit and Asmara; making long distance communication possible between the various regions by providing 50 towns with manual exchanges and to extend wooden and steel poles for achieving this goal to expand the telegraph and telephone links built during the first programme; and generally speaking, to create conditions conducive to the installation of telex links for facilitating international and national communication with rural areas. The projects were financed through the 7.25 million Birr loan obtained from the world Bank and the 7.75 million Birr acquired from domestic sources, costing 15 million Birr all in all.

Third Development
Programme: 1965 - 1967

This was marking a period of time when there was a great demand for telephone services. To implement this programme a 15.94 million Birr loan was made available by the World Bank 11.06 million Birr had also come from the Board's own resources. Under the project, telephone exchanges were expanded in Addis Ababa, Asmara and Debre Zeit. At the same time automatic exchanges were installed in Dire Dawa, Keren, Massawa and Dessie. 83 towns were provided with manual exchanges. The programme also included the expansion of long-distance urban telephone lines and the provision of radio, telegraph and telex services in some rural areas.

Fourth Development Programme 1968 - 1973

The aim of this thoroughly studied programme was to install communication equipment of quality. Under this programme, the automatic exchanges in Dessie, Asmara and Massawa were expanded. The establishment of telephone exchanges in Nazareth, Jimma, Harrar and Assab was placed on a secure foundation. What is more, 250 manual exchanges were installed in new telephone stations and those that need additional lines; inter-urban transit exchanges had begun rendering services in Addis Ababa, Dessie, Asmara, Nazareth and Dire Dawa; and the telex service which was only confined to Addis Ababa was made to embrace other towns. Total expenses incurred in accomplishing this programme had added up to 41 million Birr. Out of this total sum 22.5 million Birr was obtained in the form of loans from abroad and the rest from the organization's own resources.

Relentless efforts were made to implement these development projects in accordance with existing plans. At the same time, however, it is only true to say that for various reasons it was not possible to accomplish these demanding tasks precisely on schedule. The first development programme in particular was implemented far too long behind schedule. Various reasons were to account for these short comings which had culminated in serious delays. There was considerable shortage of trained manpower when the Board was created: loans made available by international financiers were not released on time; difficult situations were created by way of hampering rehabilitation work on telecommunication lines because the roads and bridges destroyed during the war could not undergo repair; the cost of telecommunication equipment was rocketing sky-high; there was a serious shortage of transport facilities; and it had taken years for the former Ministry of Posts, Telegraph and Telephones to provide the title deeds of property transferred to the Board for these reasons the activities of the Board during the first three years were not profitable.

From the middle of 1956 on wards however, the establishment was getting stronger in the fields of administrative organization and trained manpower. At the same time, because it was also receiving the requisite support from the Government, it was turning into a profit-making institution. In accordance with this, until the fourth development programme right from the inception of the Board, through the funds made available from its own resources and the 89.75 million Birr loan extended to it, the establishment had been satisfactorily shouldering its responsibilities.

Work Accomplished during the four Development Programmes.

Great efforts were made during the four consecutive development programmes by way of meeting the communication needs of the public. In accordance with the means at the disposal of the establishment, manual and automatic telephone exchanges were installed. Telephone, telegram and telex services had expanded through the intermediary of modern equipment. During the first development programme, the communication facilities destroyed by war had been rehabilitated. The remaining three programmes were concentrating attention on the installation of new equipment and the further expansion of services. Provided here under are the work achieved through these development programmes.

Telephone Services

When the Board came into existence, telephone services were in a primitive stage of development. Most of the telephone exchanges were then manual in nature. In 1953, there were only three telephone exchanges in the whole country-in Addis Ababa, Asmara and Adihugri. There were then no more than 3000 telephone subscribers. Besides these, there were 25 manual exchanges in the major regional capitals with 800 telephone lines.

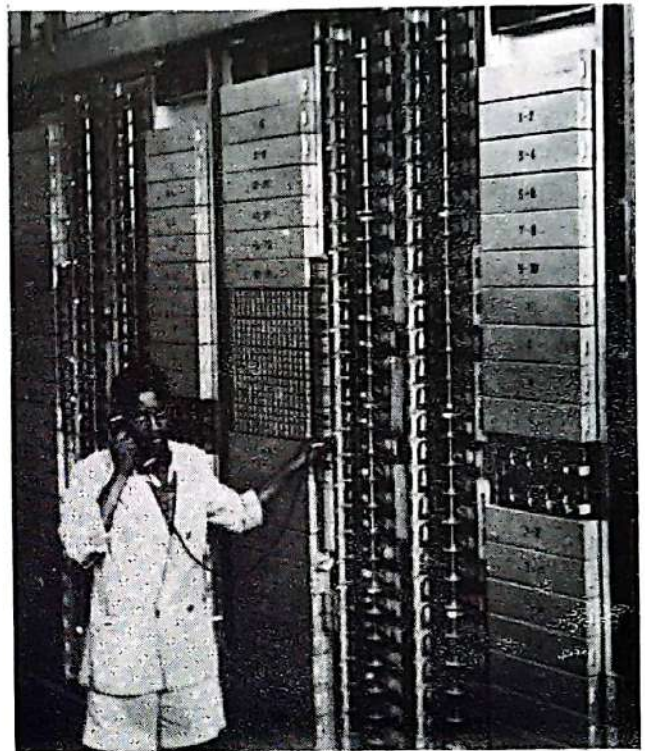

A 1500- line automatic exchange was at the disposal of Addis Ababa. This could not certainly cope with the then existing traffic in telephone calls. A 2,000 line automatic exchange was installed at Filwoha in 1955 to cope with this demand. Through these

Telephone exchanges of various capacities were installed in other major urban centres depending on the existing need. A 120 lines crossbar exchange was set up in Debre Zeit in 1958. Dire Dawa was provided with an additional 800 lines exchange in 1966, Addis Ababa (Arada Branch) with a 1,000 lines exchange in 1968, Dessie with 800 line exchange, Debrezeit with a 200 lines exchange and Massawa with a 100 lines exchange in addition to the previously existing ones. The expansion of telephone services in towns was a never ending process. A 1,000 lines telephone exchange was installed in Jimma in 1968 and a 600 lines one in Nazareth. The Showa and Wonji sugar estates were provided each with a 200 lines special rural telephone exchanges. In 1969, a 500 lines automatic exchange was installed in Harrar and two 1000 - lines one in Addis Ababa. Similarly, a 1,000 - lines automatic telephone exchange became operational in Assab in 1971. Generally speaking, a great deal has been done by way of expanding telephone services during the years embraced by the four development programmes. There were only 50 telephone service stations in 1953. At the end of 1974, this number had grown to 345. Growing at an average rate of 13 percent annually, the number of telephone subscribers had also reached 46,245. To bring about some correspondence between telephone digits and subscribers, it was imperative to develop existing facilities. Until 1962, for example a four digit system of telephone number was in force in Addis Ababa. A four - digit system was adopted in that year. And sine change is in the nature of things, a six-digit system was adopted in 1973.

Work directed towards the installation and expansion of exchanges has made tremendous contributions towards the growth of telephone traffic. As a consequence, since its initiation in 1954, the international telephone traffic has grown on an average by 12 percent annually. Domestic calls have grown by 15 percent and urban ones by 12.3 percent annually.

Network Construction

The expansion of exchanges and telephone stations is an integral part of our work. We derive special satisfaction from the contemplation of the fact that this has been reasonably achieved. It can be safely said that until 1953 there was virtually no telephone networks in other areas aside from Addis Ababa and Asmara. Even in these metropolitan cities the length of the cable network did not exceed 1,000 pair kilometres. When the first and the second automatic exchanges were installed at Filowa, they were provided with cables 4,000 and 3,000 pair kilometers long respectively. From then on telephone services kept on expanding qualitatively and quantitatively. In accordance with this expansion the laying of cables also grew in extent.

One cannot also under-estimate the place occupied by the energy that had gone into the construction of long-distance inter-urban lines. The first inter-urban line built in accordance with the initial development programme was 10144 pair kilometres long. In order to bring about a qualitative improvement in communication on this line carrier equipment had been progressively installed. Inter-Urban telephone lines were stretched between Addis Ababa, Asmara, Dessie, Jimma, Dire Dawa and Gondar in 1954-and between Bati and Assab in 1962. The work which had gone into these projects was of significant importance.

Provided below in a graphic from are the urban and inter-urban lines built during the four development programmes.

Through radio communication, telegraph and telephone services were being provided in places lying beyond the ambit of these urban networks. The centre for both domestic and international radio reception and transmission since the establishment of the Board was the relevant station built on Jimma road. The Beseka Radio Reception station was set up in 1956 to up-grade the quality of electronic services. This station was providing international telephone and telegraph services. What is more, it was at that time that the station was beginning to receive world news and putting this at the service of the press Department of the Ministry of Information. Consecutive efforts were being also successfully made to install various modern radio transmission and reception equipment. To improve the services provided by the Jimma road Radio station, this was transferred to the technically better organized Akaki Transmission and Reception Set-up. At the same time also a radio-telephone terminal was initiated at the Filwoha exchange. To improve the services provided by it, the Radio Reception Station was transferred to Sululta.

Telegraph services constitute one of the first means of communications. As it may be recalled, telegraph messages were being conveyed through the medium of the old Morse code. To improve the quality of the service an equipment known as A.R.Q. was installed in 1963 and made the Morse code a thing of the past in the field of telegraphic communication. Until then telegrams written in Amharic were being transmitted by first transcribing them into Latin characters. However, through the initiative taken by Ato Terefe Raswork to devise an Amharic teletype machine, these messages began to be transmitted in the national script. Through these efforts, the first gentex service was put in operation in the country.

The telex service came into operation in Ethiopia for the first time in 1963. It had a modest start by manual exchange through six domestic and two international lines. There were then only five telex subscribers. Customers of the telex service can ofcourse always meet electronically and exchange written messages. This had made the service vital for commercial transactions and administrative purposes. For this reason, the Addis Ababa manual telex exchange was transformed into a semi-automatic service. At the same time also direct telex lines to foreign countries grew from 2 to 27. Additional exchanges were set up in Asmara, Dire-Dawa and Assab. The Addis Ababa telex exchange was also expanded to meet existing needs.

Various Services

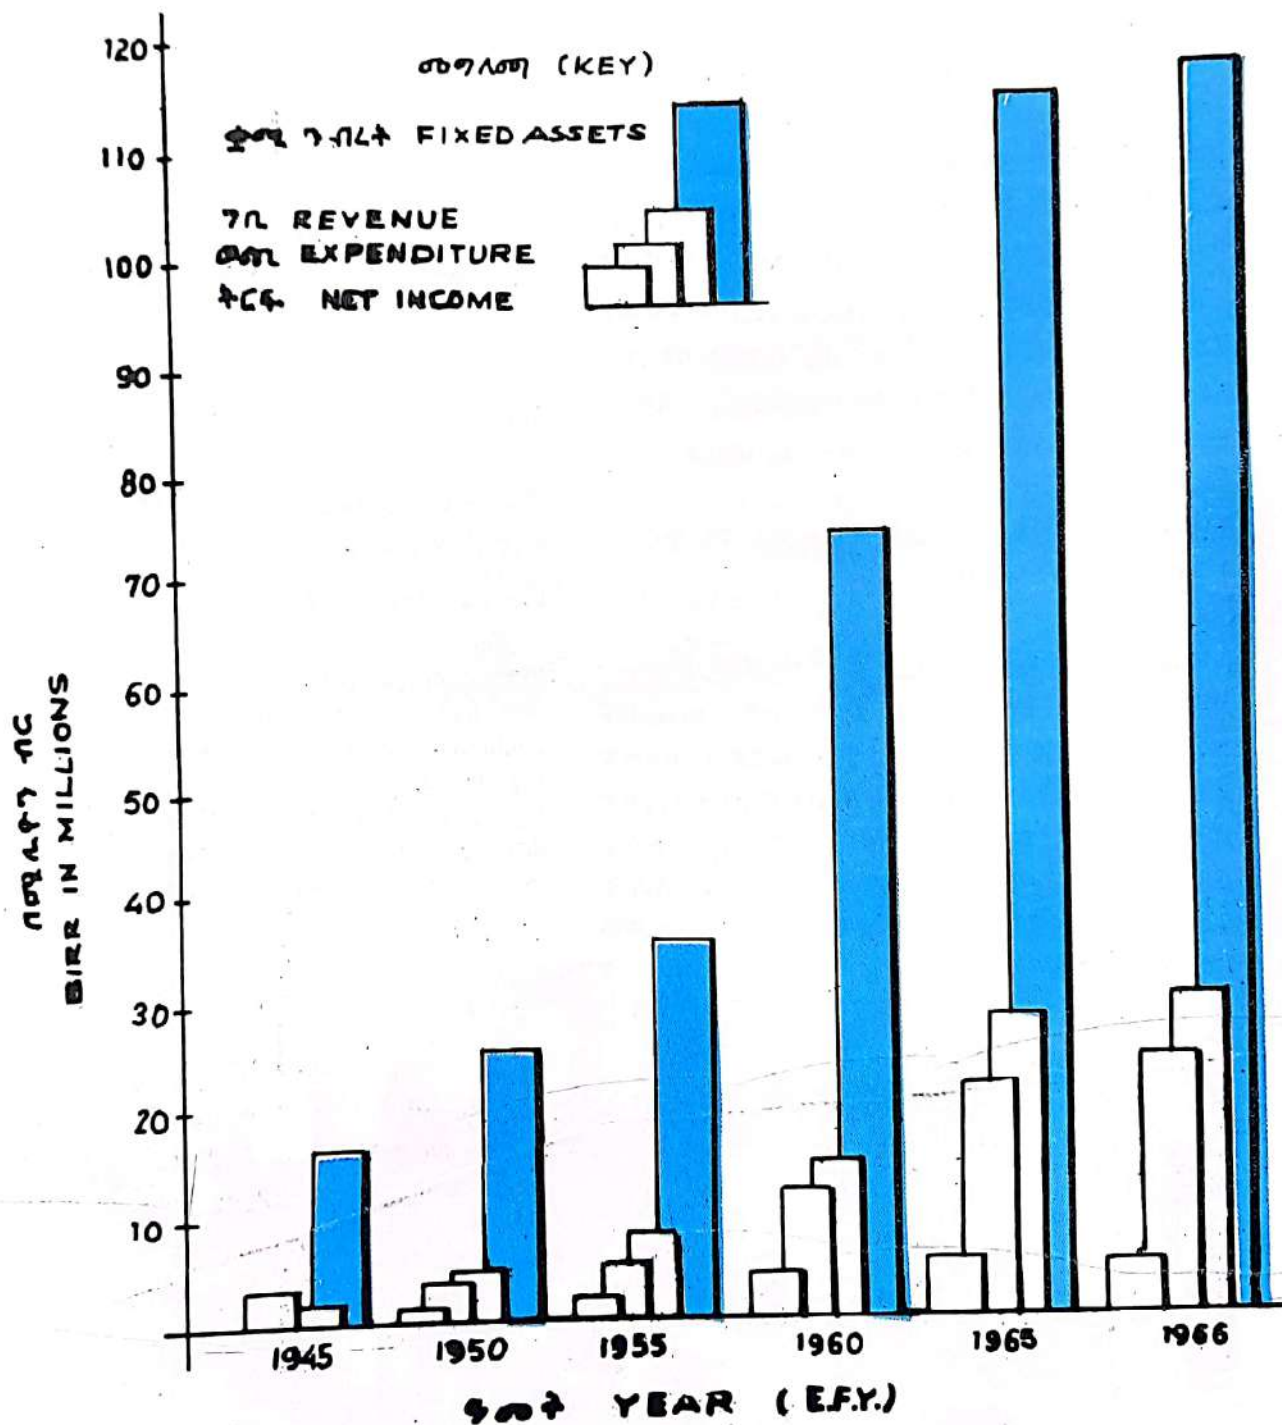

In addition to telephone, telex and telegraph facilities leased circuit, tele-photography and private radio license issuing services are also provided.

Financial Situation

As it is specified in article 16 of the proclamation establishing the Board of Telecommunication, the institution was set up with assets worth 3 million Birr acquired from the Government and the 3.75 million Birr loans made available to it by the World Bank adding up to a total sum of 6.75 million Birr. This was distributed into 6,700 shares worth each 1,000 Birr. All the shares are owned by the Government. In accordance with proclamation 170 /52, this capital had grown to 7.71 million Birr. Again in 1967, the capital was raised to 20 million Birr through proclamation 246. Finally proclamation 328 raised it to 40 million Birr.

The assets of the institution which had stood at 7.98 million in 1953 were growing at an annual rate of 11 percent. At the end of 1974 these assets were worth 69.88 million Birr. The growth of these provides a conclusive evidence of the fact that the organization has been gathering more and more momentum over the years. The growth in the profit that the institution is making can be also viewed in the light of the steady expansion of its services as time goes by. The profits made by the organization during the four development programmes have been growing on an average at 18 percent annually. For this reason the Authority is financially secure and self-sufficient.

A semi-automatic international exchange making telephone services possible was installed in Addis Ababa in 1989. Through this exchange Ethiopia can be contacted by telephone, from the outside world. And, calls to the outside world by telephone have been greatly facilitated through operators. Some 19.7 million Birr, have been spent in undertaking the following various development projects: New equipment had to be installed and existing ones expanded; civil construction work had to be undertaken in Awassa and Makalle for building offices for telephone exchanges; roads had to be built between microwave relay stations from Addis Ababa to Gondar, from Dessie to Assab, from Shashemane to Moyale and from Jimma to Nakamte; and telephone and radio equipment had to be installed in various places.

Private Branch Exchanges

To facilitate and speed up inter communication in various administrative offices and organizations and thereby economise time, private branch exchanges play a vital role.

Private branch exchanges are either automatic or manual. Generally speaking, until the beginning of July 1975, there were 545 private branch exchanges. This had grown to 930 by July 1983.

Coin Operated Public Telephones

A considerable number of the public are utilizing these services because coin-operated street telephones provide fast services at little expense. Demand for these public telephones has been growing from time to time. Numbering 460 late in 1974, the public

Telephone Traffic

It is obvious that exchanges and transmission have been steadily improving over the years. Since the favourable situation thereby created had been conducive to extensive automatic calls, this had given rise to a dense traffic with which the Authority was dealing effectively. Accordingly the number of urban calls was 113,316,150 by the third quarter of 1974 and 314,516,810 by the first week of July 1983, which marks considerable growth in traffic.

Let us now consider international calls. By the end of the third quarter of 1974 104,365 international calls were made from Ethiopia to various parts of the world. By the middle of 1983, this had grown to 205,269.

Urban Telephone Network

Telephone exchanges have to be interconnected to make communication possible within a town or between, urban centres. This is generally known as the urban network and consist of overhead and underground cables. Great attention is being paid to this network which is vital for the expansion of communication services. In Addis Ababa and in other urban centres in possession of telephone exchanges the extension of overhead lines and underground cables has been extensively carried out during the past years. Consequently, many thousands of pair kilometres of telephone lines have been built at great expense to the authority.

Microwaves And Inter-urban Telephone Services

In towns on the long distance inter-urban telephone lines it is vital to prepare the ground work for enabling more than two people to conduct conversations. Towards this end, in accordance with the fifth development programme, electronic carrier equipment are now installed and are rendering better services in many places. Several stations operating within reasonable distances are also becoming the beneficiaries of messages enjoying clarity through the VHF radio communication.

Then there is the question of communication between towns where there is a great demand for communication service and where the economic and technical situation is conducive to development. In such places a UHF communication with up to 120 channels and a microwave with 300 to 960 channels have been in operation for some time now. Microwave communication provides technical clarity in telephone, telex and telegram services between towns located far apart. Over and above this worthy service microwave communication has also made possible the transmission of television to the various regions. The expansion of microwave communication was proceeding at full speed during the fifth development programme. Between 1975 and 1981. Nazareth, Dire-Dawa, Harrar, Jijiga, Shashamane, Jimma, Assab, Gondar, Bahr Dar, Nakamte, Mettu, Gore, Awassa, Dilla and Moyalle were the beneficiaries of Microwave communication. The microwave project linking Ethiopia with Kenya by extending the line from Shashamane to Moyale was also completed. Thus making this country a member of the pan-African Telecommunication network.

Telex And Telegram Services

During the fifth development programme it was projected to improve telex services. It is to be recalled that the telex exchange was semi-automatic. This was replaced in 1979 by an 800 - number new telex exchange which went into service nationally and internationally without the assistance of operators. The Authority had 271 telex subscribers by the beginning of July 1975. The number of telex subscribers grew during the fifth development programme to reach 562 in July 1983.

By the last quarter of 1974, the traffic in telegrams had consisted of 107,354 messages. Towards the third quarter of 1983 this had grown to 36,506 messages.

Over five million Birr had gone into the installation of telex exchanges and the purchase of teleprinter equipment during the fifth development programme.

Historians tell us that Ethiopia was communicating with the outside world by telegraph and telephone lines through Addis Ababa , Asmara and Kasala. Later from 1933 to 1979, the country's links with foreign countries were limited by HF radio communication services. Viewed in relation to the products of modern technology, communication through high frequency radio transmission and reception aggravated by atmospheric disturbances has radically gone down. It is an undeniable fact however, that before yielding pride of place to other fruits of modern technology, HF radio communication had been playing a vital role in bringing the world closer together than ever before.

One of the aims and objectives of the Fifth Telecommunication Development Programme was to bring about a radical improvement in the quality and efficiency of international services in the field of communication. Accordingly, the HF radio communication facility was replaced by a "Standard A" satellite earth station at Sululta with a 300 - Channel semi-automatic telephone exchange. The station had gone into operation in 1979. Communication is made in the field of telephone and television traffic through the intermediary, of a geostatic Satellite orbiting the earth at a distance of 36,000 km over the Atlantic ocean. Over 12 million Birr was invested in the Sululta Earth Station Satellite Project. Because of the establishment of the Sululta Satellite Communication Station, the telephone, telex, telegraph and data receiving services had greatly improved in quality. What is more, the satellite communication earth station had also made possible the reception of television programmes from other countries. When, the station was set up it had a 36 - channel international communication facilities.

Investment worth 125 million Birr was carried out during the fifth development programme. Out of this total investment, 80 million Birr was obtained in the form of a loan from the World Bank. The remaining 40 million Birr expenses were covered with the Authority's own resources in the form of service income.

At the end of the financial year in 1983, the ever-growing operating capital of the Authority had stood at 40 million Birr. At the same time, the reserve capital at the disposal of the Authority had amounted to 119,431,456 Birr. 1974. At the end of the fifth development programme during the last quarter of 1982, this had grown to 132,382,798 Birr. This had marked a growth of 89 percent.

The annual income of the Authority at the end of the 1974 fiscal year was 34,063,013 Birr. This grew to 76,648,468 Birr at the end of the 1982 fiscal year, a 125 percent increase. After making allowances for loans and taxes payable to the Government, the net profit of the Authority was 22,080,000 at the end of the 1983 fiscal year. Compared with the net income of 6,156,942 Birr registered at the end of the 1974, this marks a growth of 258 percent. The accounts of the Authority are examined annually by external auditors.

The Sixth Development Programme:- 1984 - 1994

The Ethiopian Telecommunications Authority has been implementing five development programmes since its establishment by Charter as a Board. It is worth mentioning that more money had been invested during the Sixth Development programme than in the course of the previous five Development programmes. A total of 214.75 million Birr was invested during the five Development Programmes. It was 316 million Birr during the Sixth Development Programme. This marks a growth of 47 percent.

Some of the aims and objectives of the development programme were the following:-

- The expansion of telephone services by installing modern digital exchanges.
- Rehabilitation, repair and improvement of old and outdated long-distance lines; and expanding ser-

- Bringing about a qualitative improvement in services rendered

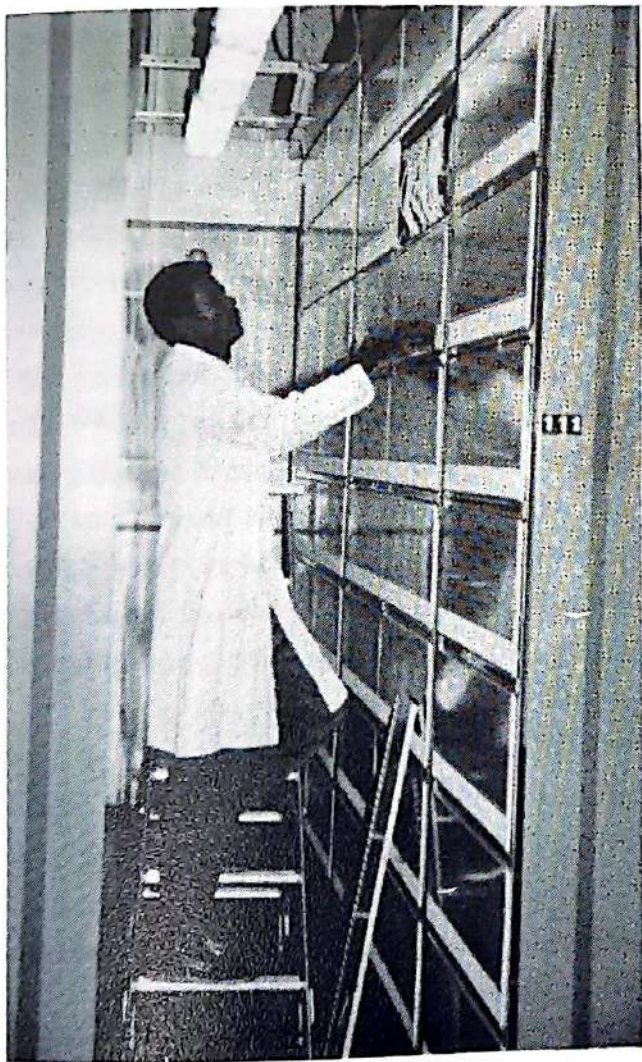

Sources of financial loans for undertaking the development projects were mainly the International Development Association (IDA), the African Development Bank (ADB) and the Italian and Swedish Governments. These financial institutions and Governments had provided loans totaling 316.3 million Birr of which 68.1 percent was in foreign exchange. The rest of the expenses, 31.9 percent, was met from the Authority's own resources.

The sixth development programme is different in various respects from the projects previously undertaken. Among these could be mentioned the improvement in the communication services provided to the public through the installation of modern digital exchanges. It was also during this programme that services like facsimile, telex and data transmission were initiated. The installation of additional lines was vital for international communication. Towards this end the second Satellite Earth Station was established. It was at this time also that telephone exchanges were linked to one another through a network of optical fibers. At the same time, in Sululta, Asmara, Makalle Gode and Humera Domestic Satellite Earth Stations were established and put into operation. In some towns where there were no automatic exchanges improved services were provided with operator-assisted semi-automatic exchanges.

Because peace and security was reigning supreme in the country towards the completion of the development programme the Authority had taken advantage of this favourable situation by rehabilitating communication facilities damaged and destroyed during the war. This Emergency Recovery and Reconstruction programme (ERRP) was conducted through loans made available by International Development Association (IDA) to the Authority to the tune of 8.3 million Birr.

The budget allocated for the implementation of the sixth Development programme was 316.3 ,million Birr. Of this total sum, 102.3 million Birr had come from the Authority's own resources and the remaining 214.0 million Birr from international financial institutions.

However, the Sixth Development Programme was carried out at a time when the international financial situation was marked by instability. It was for this reason that the loans obtained from the International Development Association (IDA) were inflated in value. Similarly, local costs of operation had also gone up.

Telephone services were expanded during the development programme until the end of the 1993 fiscal year by opening 48 new stations. Including the seven branches existing in Addis Ababa digital exchanges were installed in 20 stations. Over 42,000 telephone customers could be served through the facilities. 9,000 others were made to receive better services.

Towards the completion of the sixth development programme the capacity of automatic telephone exchanges had shown a growth of 62 per cent. Generally speaking, 89 per cent of customers were benefiting from automatic telephone services.

One of the outstanding outcomes of this development programme was the expansion and going into operation of telefax services. The demand for this service has been growing from time to time. There

There is an urgent need to launch the Seventh Development Programme which is in its incipient stages through the support provided by international lending institutions. The existence of such a support is also evident when one considers the losses recently incurred by the organization as a result of the devaluation of the Ethiopian currency. Such a loss could only be made up for through a general revision of existing tariffs. Recently a request was forwarded to the Government favouring adjustment on tariffs regarding international and national calls. It is believed that an answer is expected to come soon.

Detailed projects Implemented during the Sixth Development programme

Telephone Services:

Various telephone exchanges which are the products of digital technology have been established and providing service in various towns during the sixth development programme. Through the medium of these digital exchanges which went into operation in 1990, it has been made possible to provide telephone services of quality and clarity by enabling customers to make calls to any part of the world without the intervention of a third party in the shape of an operator.

At the close of the development programme 988 coin-operated public telephones were providing service in 19 major towns. 76.4 per cent of these were being deployed in Addis Ababa. previously public telephones were limited merely to providing services within towns alone. Beginning in 1990, however, through the medium of modern coin operated telephone apparatuses one can make calls in towns possessing automatic exchanges.

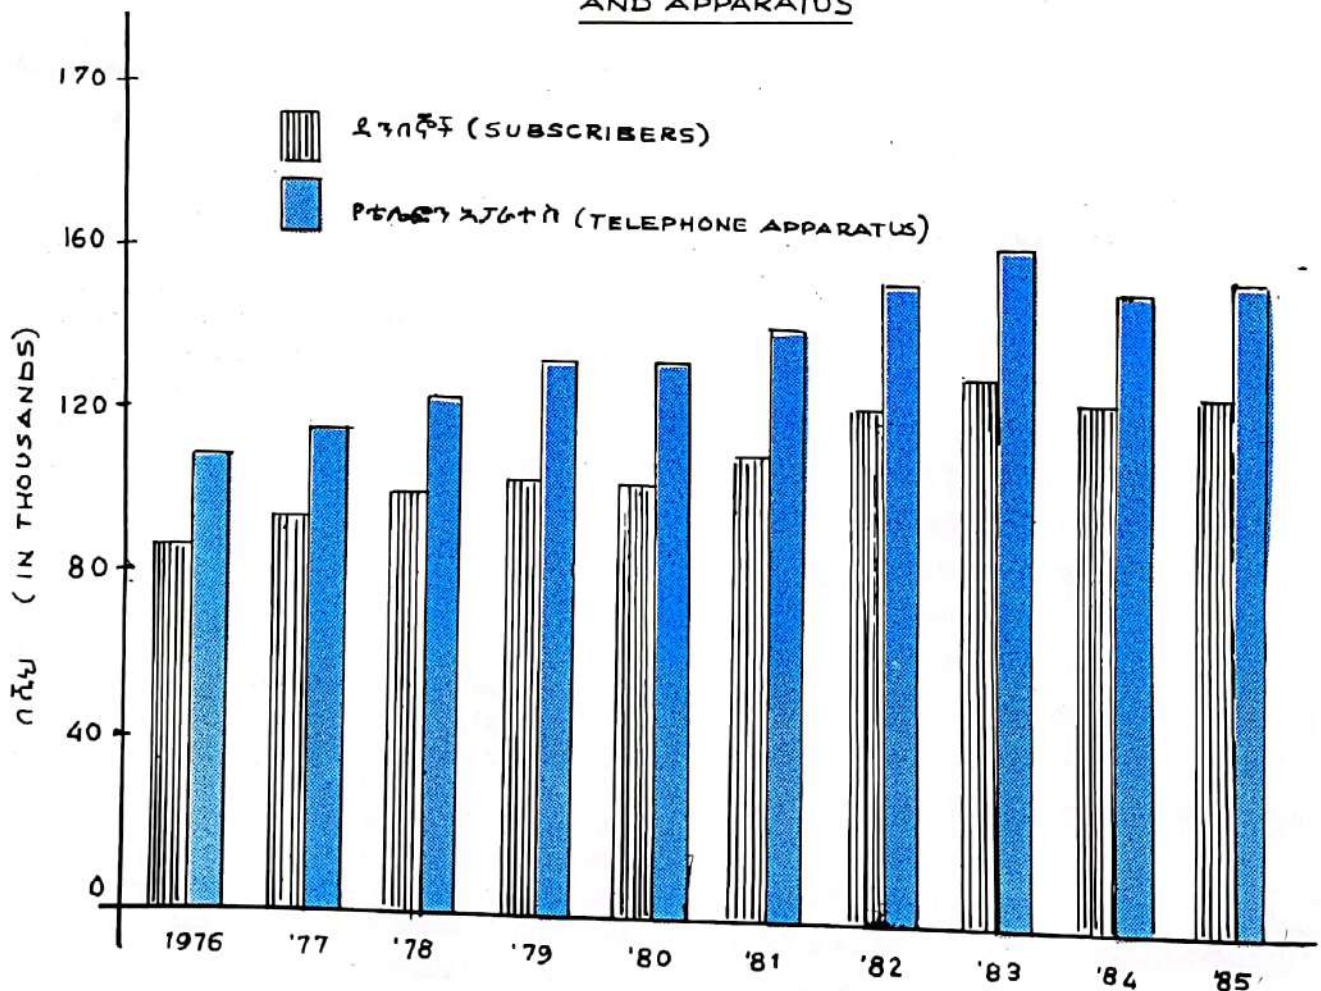

At the end of the development programme, 1,251 Private Branch Exchanges were in operation in the country. 1,080 of these were capable of providing automatic services. The remaining 171 were functioning through the intermediary of operators.

It is to be borne in mind also that there are many customers who are living far from the efficient services provided by automatic exchanges. Semi-automatic exchanges at the service of such customers have grown to such an extent that they are now in operation in 55 stations.

During the sixth development programme the expansion of the urban telephone network was proceeding at an accelerated rate in all places where telephone exchanges were established and extended. All in all over 320,000 pair kilometres of overhead lines and underground cables were extended and laid during this programme. The interconnection of the automatic exchanges in Addis Ababa was replaced by digital radio communication during the programme. Through the initiating of such a system, telephone messages were attaining a remarkable stage of clarity. The optical fibre electronic communication system, which is partly the final stage of cable technology, was stretched from the Filwoha and Arada exchanges to the international transit station and are now operating smoothly.

Telephone communication has an important bearing on the economic and social relationships of society. The demand for such a means of communication has been growing progressively, from time to time to such an extent that it is over 161 per cent beyond the capacity of the total number of exchanges. In the course of the future development programmes, the goal of the Authority is to meet this great demand in addition to providing quality service of international standard.

Domestic Long - Distance Communications

Be it international or domestic long-distance Communication had made a debut with high-frequency (short-wave) radio contacts. Today this had undergone tremendous change both qualitatively and quantitatively. The world is now finding itself at a stage when the analog and the digital microwave equipment possessing capacities of hundreds and thousands of lines are in service.

It has been mentioned earlier that in accordance with the efforts made by the Authority to benefit from the fruit of modern technology it had built a satellite earth station serving the sacred purpose of international communication. With regard to domestic communication services, these are being put at the disposal of the largest number of people possible through VHF carrier lines, UHF radio and through microwave links. There are a few towns in the country whose geographical orientation is not favourable for extending telephone lines. However, by installing digital multi-access radio communication facilities in many rural stations the service could be realized.

The analog microwave lines, which are the backbone of inter-urban communication, have generally speaking outlived their time. During the sixth Development Programme, these are being replaced by the digital microwave system. Known as route-2, one of the important lines is going from Addis Ababa to Dire-Dawa and Harrar had been replaced by the microwave digital system. 24 other towns have been interconnected through a digital system with capacities of 30 to 270 telephone lines.

Satellite Communication

Among the tasks of installation, expansion and improvement carried out during the Sixth Development Programme were the following:

a) A "standard A" earth station operating in conjunction with a geostationary satellite over the Indian Ocean was built in 1984 for linking Ethiopia with countries of the Middle East and Far East. This Second Sululta earth station has an antenna with a diameter of 13 meters and provides 58 telephone lines with 13 countries.

d) The analog lines went digital through the medium of the IDR/DCME equipment.

e) The relay microwave line built between the international transit exchange to the Sululta station went digital.

f) The installation of television receiving equipment (TVRO) was carried out for Ethiopian Television, big Government hotels, for members of the diplomatic Corps and others possessing permits.

During this programme, a digitalization process was put into operation which ensures the clarity of satellite communication. What is more, new technologies were being introduced into Ethiopia to broaden the horizon of international relations.

The Authority has put into operation television receiving equipment known as TVRO for the benefit of towns in the peripheral regions of Ethiopia in the simplest manner possible.

At the close of the Sixth Development Programme, Ethiopia was successfully linked to 20 countries through 286 lines.

Telegraph, Telex and Data

Like all other telecommunication Services, those of the telegraph have been also growing from time to time. However, the facsimile service has been popular with our customers. For this reason, the traffic in telegrams has not been growing as desired.

የቴሌክስ ደምበኞች መስመር የመስጠት አቅም እንዲኖረው ሲደረግ በተጨማሪም 220 የቴሌቴክስና የዳታ መሥመሮች ተተክለዋል።

ከጠቅላላው የቴሌክስ ደምበኞች 90 በመቶው የሚገኙት በአዲስ አበባ ከተማ ውስጥ ነው። ባለፉት አራት ዓመታት የቴሌክስና ቴሌግራም ፍላጎት በአዲስ አበባ ከተማ እየቀነሰ መምጣት የሚታይ ቢሆንም በክልሎች መጠናከር ሳቢያ አገልግሎት በየክፍለ ሀገራት እየተሰራጨ ይገኛል።

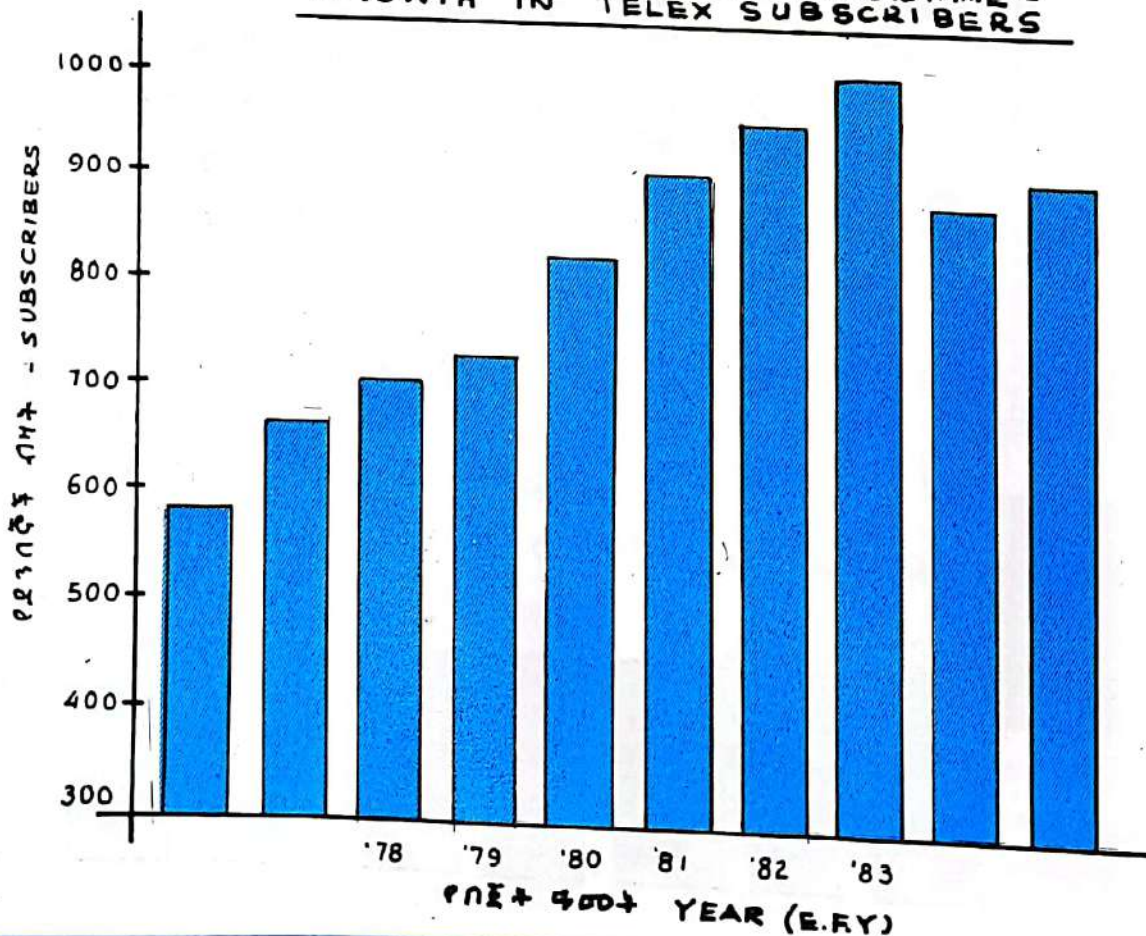

The central telex exchange was changed into the digital system in 1979. Since then it has not been only improving qualitatively but was also providing better services to our customers.

Thus, towards the close of the Sixth Development Programme the central telex exchange had a capacity of 2,488 lines. At the same time also 220 telex and data processing lines were also installed.

On the regional level, transmission had grown tremendously. It was thus made possible to provide 21 towns with Gentex and telex services. All in all 39 towns with 8 VFT and 31 TDM transmission equipment were inter-connected through an exchange.

90 per cent of our telex customers are found in Addis Ababa. During the past four years the demand for telex and telegram has been declining to some extent. However, the establishment of regional administration has been stimulating its expansion through out the country.

As the head quarters of the organization of African Unity (OAU), the United Nations Economic Commission for Africa (UNECA) and many other international organizations, Addis Ababa has a great demand for modern means of communication. This being the case, the demand for data communication has been progressively growing during the past few years. Cognizant of this fact, the Authority has been making some discernible efforts to satisfy this demand for serving its customers by acquiring data modem equipment. Among the major steps taken in this direction were renting data modem to various organizations on the telephone line, linking six branch offices of the Ministry of Finance with their computer centre through the modem and doing the same thing with 28, branch offices of the Commercial Bank in regard to their computer centre.

Growth In Traffic

Telephones

Urban and direct interurban telephone calls which had come under the umbrella of the sixth development programme have been progressively growing, reaching 470.8 million metered pulses by September 1993. This is a growth of 53 percent over figures at the beginning of the development programme.

It is to be conceded that domestic telephone calls had been steadily growing until 1988. This notwithstanding it is to be admitted that from 1989 onwards these calls had been declining in number for some four years. The main reason to account for this situation was the absence of stability in northern Ethiopia which had disrupted the existing communication system. However, through the Recovery and

Reconstruction programme conducted since then, domestic calls had grown by 23.3 percent in 1993.

During the development programme international calls grew by 30.5 percent annually, the expansion of the Sululta satellite earth station and the increase in the number of microwave lines to neighbouring countries are some of the main reasons accounting for this growth. During the same period under consideration international Satellite telephone lines grew on an average by 16 percent annually and microwave ones by 7 percent.

Of the international telephone calls made in 1993, 24 percent were to the United States of America, 14 percent to Saudi Arabia, 8 percent to Italy, 7 percent to England, 6 percent to Kenya and the remaining 41 percent to other parts of the world.

The Ethiopian Telecommunications Authority Introduced the telefax equipment into Ethiopia, a product of modern technology which transmits pictorial messages over the telephone line. The telefax service was initiated in Ethiopia with some 100 relevant electronic machines and has been growing to such an extent that by September 1993 there were 762 of them in the country. During that time the fax machines were deployed in 16 towns; and 95 percent of the customers were to be found in Addis Ababa. There is one strong reason to account for the great growth shown by telefax services. This is the permission given for machines which satisfy the technical standards set by the Authority to be imported by private users.

What is more, the Authority is providing telefax services at six of its branch offices in Addis Ababa and at a public booth in Dessie. In ten other stations the Authority is utilizing telefax services for the conduct of its own operations.

Voice cast services have been occupying an important chapter in the long history of the organization. until September 1991, these services had been registering an annual growth of 17.9 percent.

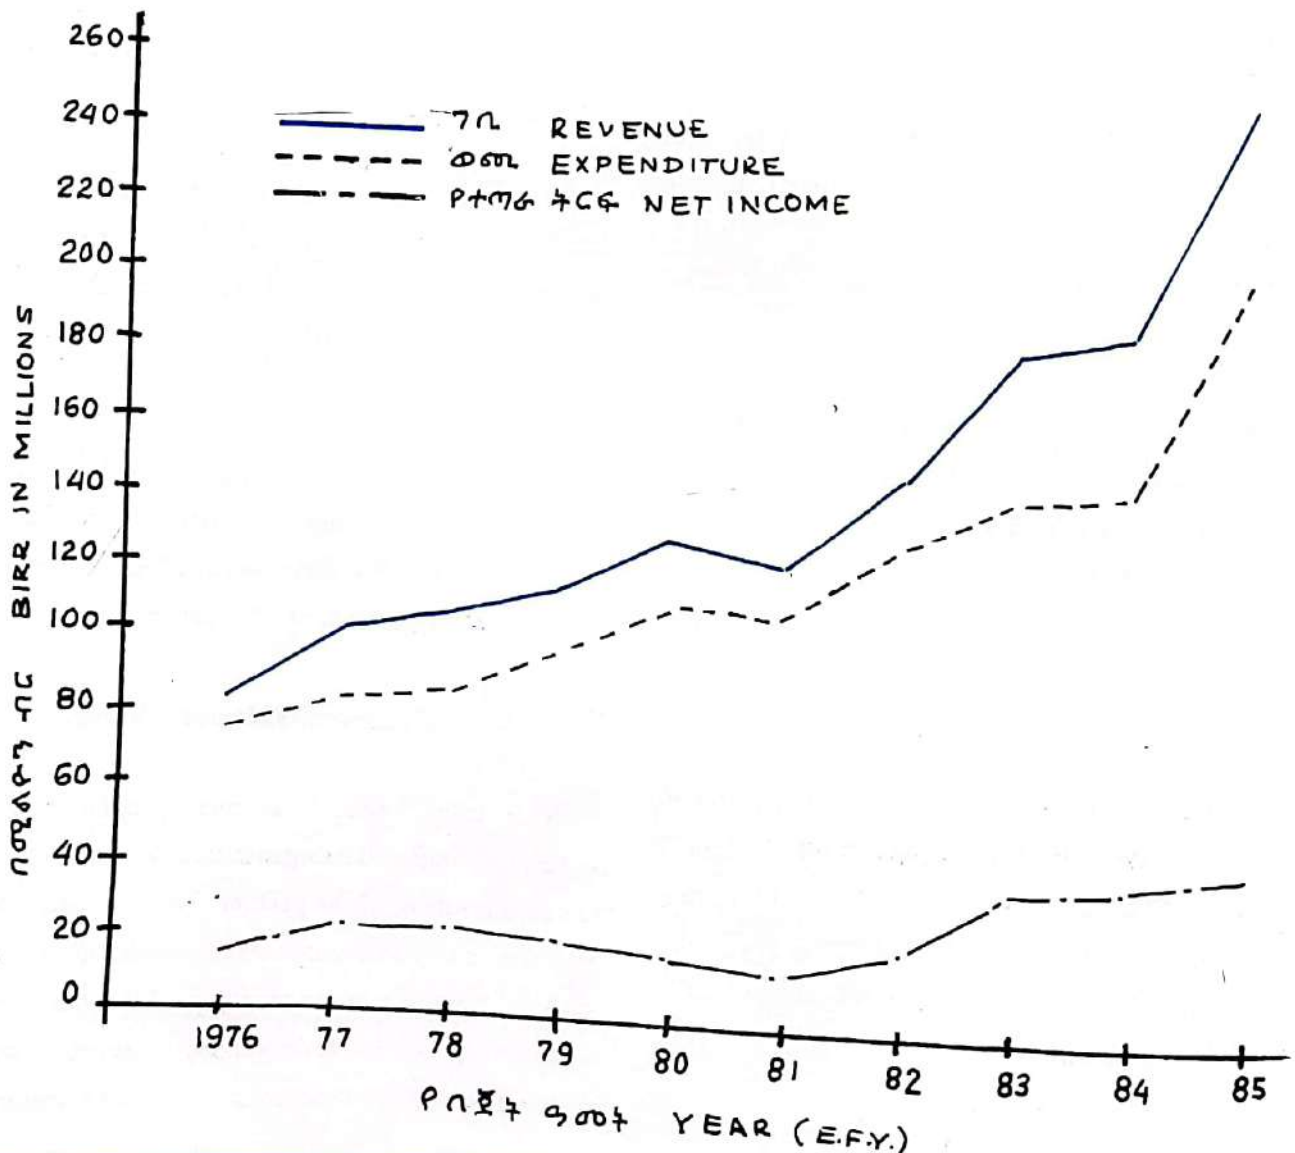

Income, Expenditure And Profit

In the course of the development programme the over all income of the Organization was growing at the annual rate of 13.34 percent. The net profit had also gone up by an annual average of 18 percent. At the same time also the expenditure of the Authority for carrying out its development programme was growing on average at an annual rate of 13 percent.

Until 1990, urban and inter-urban telephone calls were accounting for 45 percent of its income. 32 percent of the Authority's income was from international calls. During the three years from 1991 to 1993, international calls were accounting for a high proportion of its income by registering 50 percent of the total. 42 percent of the income had come from urban and direct inter-urban calls. During the development programme income from telegraph and telex services had progressively gone down. This was only 4.6 percent of the income during the 1993 fiscal year.

The income of the Authority had plummeted in 1989 in particular. This had happened because the microwave communication facilities serving the northern regions had gone out of service, resulting in the reduction of domestic and international calls from that part of Ethiopia. ETA's income has been growing since 1991 for the following reasons:-

- a) Because digital exchanges were put in operation
- b) Domestic and international calls had grown in volume and
- c) Expansion of Tele Fax and Data Transmission Services.
- d) Various stations resume services under the rehabilitation programme

The Ethiopian Telecommunications Authority has been obviously providing a tangible support to economic, Social and political development activities of the country. Over and above this, during the Authority's sixth development programme from 1987 to 1991, it had contributed 312,404,000 Birr in the form of an income to the Government excluding residual surplus. At the same time also from international services it had earned some 204,495,000 Birr for the Government in foreign exchange.

property and Debt situation

Assets belonging to the Authority have been growing from year to year and were worth 281,071,455 Birr by 1985. By more than doubling itself, this figure was 582,490,467 Birr in 1992 . During the same time, the authority's operating capital increased from 40,million to 130,million Birr.

It is a well known fact that the cost of communication equipment and project operation has been growing by leaps and bounds. However, as a result of the situation of instability which had been prevailing in the country the Authority was lax from increasing service charges for a long time. The last increase in these charges was effected 13 years ago. The increase was then 4 cents a pulse on urban and inter-urban calls.

The Authority does not fundamentally believe in the necessity to bring about changes in charges. However, such a necessity had been raised by the World Bank and other lending financial institutions. In response to these calls a Swedish research team was invited to conduct the relevant studies. The conclusions of the study group had certainly gained acceptability. However, things should always be viewed in relation to the objective conditions prevailing in the country. Accordingly an additional study conducted by the Authority's own professional personnel in 1990 and presented to an executive committee. While the committee was discussing the issue a sales tax proclamation was decreed. This had forced the Authority to bear additional expenses. To cover these expenses the Authority's two-cent increase in tariff was approved by the Government and went into force immediately.

Manpower

When it was first established, the Board of Telecommunication inherited only 642 employees from the Ministry of posts. Telegraphs and Telephones. Most of these were line-men, telephonists, radio operators, technicians and messenger. The shortage of trained manpower was particularly acute for filling high administrative and managerial posts. Consequently, the Board recruited 92 foreign professionals for the posts of a general manager, technicians, traffic controllers, administrators, and financial experts. What is more, Ethiopians with sufficient technical know-how were also recruited, thus boosting the number of employees to 1,179. In accordance with the decision taken later, beginning in 1977, the Board was being managed and manned by qualified Ethiopians. Efforts directed towards bringing about a qualitative and quantitative change in employees of the organization were proceeding at full steam. In accordance with this programme of worthy venture in the field of Ethiopianization, 5296 officials and technicians were at the service of the institution by September 1993.

The organization has its own institute for training the requisite manpower capable of installing and maintaining its own telecommunication electronic equipment and machines. This telecommunication training institute was established in 1953 by three professionals sent here by the International Telecommunication Union (ITU) in a worthy effort to ease the problem created by the acute shortage in the country for trained manpower. 325 technicians completed training at the institute in 1953 in various professional fields for the first time. Short and long-term training programmes were being conducted as required from then onwards in technical, traffic and administrative fields for many Ethiopians. Through these training programmes the Authority has succeeded in getting hold of the required trained manpower. In accordance with the need arising for this, employees were being also sent abroad for advanced training.

Beginning from its inception in 1953, the institute has provided training in various fields to new recruits and for employees pursuing refreshment course of study.

Medical Service

In pursuit of the belief that a healthy worker would be very productive and thus a great asset to the organization, since its establishment the Authority has been putting adequate medical services at the disposal of its employees. By hiring the expertise of a prominent medical doctor in Addis Ababa in 1954, employees of the Authority were receiving free medical services twice a week at specified times. Concrete steps were taken in 1958 to improve these medical services. Through recruitment of an additional medical doctor, favourable conditions were created enabling these same employees to receive medical services five times a week. While medications were being provided free of charge, the Authority also pays rentals for a clinic.

With the aim of further improving these medical services, the Board opened in Addis Ababa its own clinic in 1962. The clinic was providing medical services at a strategic place through a doctor working part-time and a nurse and a dresser doing a full-time job. Medical staff and pharmaceutical facilities, the clinic was showing steady improvement from time to time. At present the clinic at the main office has grown to the level of a health center. At the same time also, clinics are also rendering medical services in Addis Ababa where the number of employees is very high, in Central Region and in the central warehouse. Through the intermediary of public hospitals and clinics in the major towns of regional administrations, with which agreements had been made, employees are

An employee from a regional branch office who has not been able to receive adequate medical service there, is examined at the health centre of the head office by its doctor. When additional medical treatment is required, patients receive services at Government hospitals. The Authority covers all expenses regarding medical examination, treatment and hospitalization.

Insurance

Like medical services, the rights of employees of the Authority to disability and life insurance had been recognized long ago. Beginning from 1962, permanent employees of the Ethiopian Telecommunication authority were enjoying the benefits of a 24 - hours insurance guarantees. Daily workers were ensured against disability or death while carrying out their daily duties. Insurance benefits vary according to the severity of the accidents with a ceiling of five year's salary.

Thrift and Credit Cooperative Association

The Thrift and Credit Cooperative Association of the Ethiopian Telecommunication Authority was established in 1971 through the assistance provided by the latter. Having gathered more and more momentum since then, it is now one of most prominent thrift and credit cooperative associations operating in the country. By encouraging the establishment of the association, by drafting the rules of the association, by providing the initial capital by inculcating the principles of thrift into the minds of employees and by creating favorable conditions for loans to be provided to the needy, the Authority has made tremendous contributions. Among these might be cited the following. Permission was provided for committee members to meet during hours of work and discuss matters related to the development of the association; one employee was allowed to serve the association full time as chief executive; interest - free loans amounting to 50,000 birr and payable over a period of six years were provided to the association when it was founded; and office facilities like furniture, lighting, telephones and stationery were put at the disposal of the self-help organization.

By taking advantage of the instituted assistance and support provided to it by the Authority the Thrift and Credit Cooperative Association is providing the services expected of it through the progressive growth registered in its membership and savings. By September 1993, had a membership of 4,747 people with a capital of 18,404,711 birr. At present a member of the association can borrow 16 months' gross salary payable in 8 years time with a ceiling not exceeding 14,000 birr. Members of the Association are saving 10 percent of their salaries monthly which brings them profit disbursed to them annually. Agreements have been made with various hospitals so that families of members of the association would be the beneficiaries of hospitalization on credit. This arrangement has proved to be of great service for families of the employees.

Through the intermediary of the collective agreement concluded every two years between the union and management, workers are enjoying various benefits. Among the subjects on which negotiations are conducted and collective agreements concluded between the Union and the Management are salary increment, medication maternity leave, work transfer, supply of appliances for accident prevention, free telephone services and others.

Future Plans and Projects in Progress

The Seventh 5 - Year Development Programme

Telecommunication services provide an invaluable contribution towards the development of a country. For this reason, the distribution of telephone facilities is considered in many countries as a yardstick for determining the standard of economic development. There is no gain saying the fact that the importance of this means of communication is beyond dispute in Ethiopia. As it was mentioned earlier, six development programmes were successfully implemented for the very good reason that the government had given the requisite attention to this branch of the national economy. The development of telecommunication is an endless process. That is precisely why the seventh development programme, which dwarfs all previous projects in its magnitudes, was launched in 1994. The government has set aside 1.2 billion birr to implement this programme. This is larger than the financial resources invested in all the previous projects. From the total financial resources allocated for the current development programme, 168.7 million American dollars or 843 million birr has to be made available in the form of foreign exchange for the purchase of electronic and similar equipment. Out of this total sum, an agreement providing for the acquisition of 64.2 million birr from the African Development Fund has been already signed and, consequently, the purchase of some electronic machines is already in progress.

The development plan was prepared in accordance with national economic priorities. These give priority towards meeting the need for telephone services in all sectors of the economy, towards the rehabilitation and construction of the communication network destroyed by war and other forces and towards expanding telecommunication facilities in neglected peripheral areas of the country. And, some of the aims and objectives of the development programme are the following:-

- Extending telecommunication services to rural towns so far not embraced by these, more particularly to neglected areas;
- Expanding existing digital exchanges and installing new ones;
- To raise the quality and standard of the urban telecommunication network;
- To boost the capacity of automatic telephone exchanges from 142,756 lines at present, to 370,050 lines;
- To connect 95 percent of telephone subscribers to automatic exchanges;
- To expand the telex exchange in Addis Ababa, to do the same thing with data and fax services;
- To see to it that the microwave lines and the UHF radio links are expanded in such a way that they can cope with the traffic service;
- Extending satisfactory service to neighboring African countries by strengthening the Pan-African Telecommunication Network;
- Improving and expanding the international telephone service;
- Expanding the Telecommunication Training Institute and raising the standard of its performance.

- የዓለም አቀፍ ተላታሚነትን አገልግሎትን ማሻሻልና ማስፋፋት፤
- የተላታሚነትን ማሰልጠኛ ተቋሙን ማስፋፋትና ደረጃውንም ማሳደግ ናቸው።

To realize these aims and objectives, ways and means of acquiring power generators, buildings, vehicles and others have been amalgamated into the programme.

The 7.2 million American dollars loan obtained from the European Development Bank for implementing the Emergency Recovery and Reconstruction Programme is financing the relevant projects by extending the Dessie- Adigrat digital microwave link by purchasing power generators for its twin project and to establish HF radio communication in towns ravaged by the scourge of war.

Efforts are being made to secure the rest of the foreign exchange required for implementing the programme from international lending financial institutions and from friendly foreign governments. Local expences are to be met from the Authority's own resources.

At the beginning of the development programme automatic exchanges with 23,000 lines were secured in the form of assistance from the Dutch government. Out of these donations a 5,000 line exchange was installed in Makalle and a 2,000 line exchange each in Dilla and Wolaita. Plans are under way to install the rest of the exchanges in Adigrat, Adowa, Axum and in five other towns. The going into operation of these exchanges is bound to give a great fillip to the development of telephone services.

Generally speaking, when the development programme is translated into action, the gap existing between urban and rural areas in the distribution of communication facilities is bound to get narrower through the establishment of new stations. Existing stations would be expanded; new services which are the products of modern technology would be put in operations, and, it is reasonable to believe that a great leap forward would be achieved in the country in the field of telecommunications.
